Course length

Course Description

This seven-part series is designed to transform that gaggle of actors cluttering your backstage from cumbersome extras into nothing less than the very center of your production.

Instructor Michael Calderone leads this course, through games and exercises geared to maximize your ensemble for your next production. These lessons are based on the ensemble technique that he's been using for the last 30 years, called the shoestring method.

The ensemble has a responsibility to work as one, and no role is more important than another. Without each actor playing their part, the other actors cannot tell the story to the best of their abilities. So join Michael in learning more about this exciting, practical and dramatic method.

About the Instructor

Michael Calderone is a drama instructor at Hopkins School, New Haven, CT, and previously taught at Hampton Roads Academy, Newport News, VA; The Chapin School, New York, NY; the Ensemble Theater Community School, Eagles Mere, PA; and Shoestring Plus, New Brunswick, NJ.

With a Masters of Arts Degree in Educational Theater from New York University and a Bachelors of Theater Arts Degree from Rutgers University, he believes the most meaningful part of his education came from Prof. Joseph P. Hart and his company, The Shoestring Players.
