IMPROVISATION

By KAREN LOFTUS

Students sharpen their listening and reaction skills through improv games, exercises, and scenes. They will learn five specific guidelines to apply to their improvisation: accept the offer, bring information to the scene, make active choices, make your partner look good, and don't force the humour.

There are so many different ways to approach a unit on improvisation. Keep in mind that you will have students who are really excited about this unit and some students who dread it. It's best to start with low-risk games and exercises and then build up to higher-risk ones. Low-risk games in this situation mean partnered interactions that aren't shared with the whole class.

1 - Accept the Offer

Students apply this guidelines through the games "Yes and..." "Yes Let's," and Low Risk Experts.

2 - Make Choices/Bring Information

Students learn the word "endow" and apply the concept through the exercise Low Risk Endowment.

3 - Take the Active Choice

Students discuss what it means to take the active choice and apply the concept in Quiet Scenes.

4 - Make Your Partner Look Good

Students apply this guideline through the games Cars, Vans, Buses, Blocking on Purpose, Questions Only and Here Comes Charley.

5 - Relax, Have Fun and Don't Force the Humour

Students discuss what it means to not "force" the humour. They play all the games from the unit in a high risk setting, as volunteers in front of the class.

6 - Unit Project

The final project will allow students to demonstrate their improv skills in a two-person scene.
